

The Connectors Program is an employee led referral program that helps new immigrants build professional networks and connect with local job opportunities. It also helps the City access top-tier talent who may not make it in through regular recruiting channels.

Within the City, staff volunteered to work with new Canadians to prepare for their job search and to make critical networking connections. The City first offered the Program in 2015 and a new group of participants and staff is already underway in 2016.

Councillor Villeneuve and staff participated in a video Conference Presentation to Committee on Immigration and Citizenship at the Federal Government Level.

The video conference with the Federal Government focused on the City of Surrey's recent experience in welcoming the Syrian Refugees as part of an ongoing case study and also touched on the importance of the elimination of the transportation loan repayment plan.

Since 2009, the City of Surrey and Social Policy Advisory Committee has been advocating for the termination of the refugee transportation loan program.
 Government Assisted Refugees represent less than 3% of new immigrants to this country. The total cost of their transportation and pre-entry medical costs is $13 to $15 million. Forgiving outstanding loans would cost about $38 million annually – a negligible amount in Canada's Federal Budget.

The elimination of the transportation loans for government assisted refugees is a moral and humanitarian effort to help the poorest of refugees. It also makes economic sense.

Councillor Villeneuve noted that it is an issue that many people in the Community feel passionate about and the hope is to have that requirement eliminated.
